| "Places where I was loved" is a complaint to the planetary emergency situation, marked by a whole series of serious problems closely related: speculation, impeached consumption, pollution, ecosystem degradation, depletion of natural resources, conflicts between different excessively self protected consumer societies, corporations that impose their own laws... It is necessary that the Organization of States cooperate creating rules to protect individuals from corporations that operate without borders. It is imperative that they get involved in the individuals' education to create universal values, so they work on tearing down society walls and prejudices. The World needs osmotic societies, encouraging the interchange of languages, social values, art, progress, cultures and technology, so they can enrich each other and create more biodiversity; where problems are understood as global problems. In prophylactic society, as we have been living in until the twentieth century, the individual has been isolated and could only reach a partial vision of the problems. In this self protected state, the individual is only interested on his protection and the welfare of its close circle. Thanks to Alan Ball, scriptwriter from great TV series "True Blood", where vampires coexist with human using their blood to feed themselves, and in turn, |   |

the vampires' blood heals human or take them to ecstasy, more human understand the importance of fighting for a less self protected society where flows merge and give space to new and universal social behaviour patterns.
